

TRANSPORT OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN IN TRANSPORT

O MASHILO

Email: bolengbontle@gmail.com

ABSTRACT

Preparation for I.T. and access to opportunities where women can benefit since we are going into the 4IR. Everything is being digitally made to help women expand their business through databases and business groups made for women. The Department of Transport have agreed to help any group of women who want to be empowered or have a business. Proposals are being put forth as those contracts are mostly reserved for men.

The presentation will show how women can use I.T. in their transport companies and sustain themselves while growing their business with the 4IR in mind and how to obtain share holding in a R70 billion industry (busses and trucking industry value chain). The value chain incorporates a lot of aspects that can benefit women, for an example monitoring and evaluation within the Transport industry. As one of viable and not entered by women.

Larger organizations such as Coca Cola together with the National Department of Transport, has offered their help to women in transport by providing driver training and business management training to women and youth. Transport Academy and UN has approached us to assist with the participants in their programmes coming soon for the whole supply chain in transport.